Positano, the Sea & Miramare

This is the story of Uncle Carlino, his niece Virginia and her brother Salvatore, as well as of Carlo and Vito (Virginia's children).

It all began with an aesthete dreamer: Carlo by name, his surname, Cinque like the five letters in his name. Carlo is a handsome man, a Cary Grant of the South, perhaps because his innate elegance reminds many of the Hollywood star.

"Carlino" Cinque, founder of the Miramare Hotel.

He thinks, invents, dreams, plans, assembles and dissambles.

Many years later, he will find himself saying to his alter ego, his niece Virginia:

"Virgi, my handicap is that I only have one idea at a time". "Thank Goodness", is her response.

His ability to foster affection from others is so great that everyone calls him Carlino.

He was little more than 20 y.o. when he approached his father with specific request:

"I'd like to transform the house at the top of the Scalinatella into a hotel"

At the time Positano was a land of fisherman, farmers, merchants, but most of all of emigrants. They left for America in search of fortune. Tourists were a rare commodity, and they were often simply passing through because the town only had two guesthouses.

*Carlo Cinque had an intuition about Positano's future: tourism as an industry.

He saw the best part of that future and set off to forge it himself by transforming the family into the Miramare Hotel. His father Alfonso gave his consent to that young man who befriended every foreigner that passed through the Amalfi Coast, and amused himself with life despite the fact that life had let him down by taking his mother when he was 8 y.o..

Fortunately he had Carmela, his young sister.

"Carlino" Cinque on the terrace of the Miramare Hotel, the current location of the "La Scalinatella" Restaurant.

Together with her husband Vito Attanasio, Carmela moved into the Miramare: they both balanced and supported Carlo Cinque's creativity, taking care of the hotel as if it were their own home where they worked and lived until their family got too big, reaching a total of six children.

It didn't take long for the Miramare to become a choice location.

From 1934, the year that the Miramare was founded, the decades have glided by light as air, silently and magnanimously, having witnessed enough events to fill a bookshelf with novels.

Positano grew, it became seductive, like Italy just after the war.

*Carlo Cinque's hotel set the tone
for high-class tourism.*

The lounge of the Miramare Hotel.

His sister Carmela's children also grew up.

The first two helped their uncle Carlo during the summer: Virginia, the eldest of six children, wrote the extra orders in the hotel's master book while Salvatore, the second-born, worked behind the bar counter.

They are unaware that the art of hospitality is getting under their skin, the passion of running a hotel. Like a good-natured and easygoing virus, cheerful and gregarious, it is one of the laziest nonetheless because it ends up in the blood before you know it. And there it stay, undefeatable.
